“Four years ago, the Great East Japan Earthquake and tsunami caused unprecedented damage to the northern regions of Japan. We received many messages of sympathy and various supports from the international community so we expressed our sincere appreciation of such “solidarity” from all over the world. Since then, reconstruction and rebuilding process in these affected areas have been steadily making progress. Now I believe that this is the time for Japan to show its solidarity through this humanitarian assistance not only to refugees but also to the people of Cameroon who have suffered from hosting them in their communities.” said Kazuhiko Fujita, Charge d’Affairs a.i. of Japan.

“These projects are a true testament of the joint commitment of the Japanese government and the United Nations to support the Government of Cameroon to provide rapid response to those people in risk and also work towards longer-term resilience and sustainable development objectives.” said Ms. Najat Rochdi, UN Resident Coordinator.

The Government of Japan has also provided assistance for Central African Republic and Chad through international organisations.
